BIRD'S MIGRATION

Annually, several species of birds from south latitudes sail the skies, beginning in February, travelling through countries and continents, seeking favorable areas for feed in more agreeable latitudes.

Several months later (between the end of Summer and the Fall), they return, making the same flight journey, but in the opposite path and with the same purpose. During these migration periods, throughout the entire Mirandese plateau several species can be watched, stopping their journey to feed and/or rest.
